1. In Winter Harbor [5355N-1415E] at the mouth of the Swine River on the Baltic Sea, there is a Polish naval installation. South of this installation, near the South end of the Leuchtbae sandspit, is a Soviet naval base. Source had been in and out of this channel at least 15 times during the period June 1950-October 1951, and each time noticed about 30 naval vessels of the trawler class (sic) (Kontortorpedowice Scigacze) at anchor. The Soviet naval installation occupies both sides of the channel. On proceeding inland, a church was visible on the right. On the left side was a passenger railroad station.
2. Hundreds of Soviet ~~seamen~~ were seen in this area as well as members of the Soviet Army; their branch of service could not be determined.
3. Source heard that there was a large Soviet-built radar station on an island near Szczydzin, also located near Winter Harbor, and a Polish Naval air station in Reda [5437N-1821E] about 45 km. west of Gdynia.
